An unique feature of Community Supported Agriculture is that its consumer participants share the risk of impacted crops with the farmer. Membership fees in CSA farms are paid in good faith that farmers are striving to do their best while facing their traditional adversaries of weather and pestilence. CSA shareholders agree that it is worthwhile and in their best interests to absorb the loss of a crop now and then because in so doing they keep their local food producers stable year after year, therefore funds paid into the Tolstoy Farms CSA are non-refundable.
